Ditties inscribed as Valentines by lovesick swains to the objects of their affections are of the past, and even the cards and combination articles of fancy and lace papers, pictures, satins, plushes and flowers which are yet in the market do not meet with that ready disposal by the merchants that they once did. That St. Valentine's is a gift day goes without saying. It is more so, a time for making presents, than any other, except Christmas. The character of the presents has been changed as much as the reason of their being made. Now flowers enter largely into the list of gifts, for no one can object to receiving flowers, when they might possibly refuse to accept any article of the same value, though of more lasting qualities. Now that every woman, young or old, is making a collection of some kind, either of china, silver, glass or other material, one who desires to make a present generally adds to the collection. For this reason the shops are full of odd and unique pieces of bric-a-brac. Among the articles that show the designer's art are spoons, and the handles or bowls, often both, illustrate some particular subject or characteristic. For instance, there are Washington spoons, some showing the White House, others the monument, and still others different buildings of national importance. New York spoons bave for a handle Liberty Enlightening the World, Philadelphia, the hberty bell; Boston, Fanicul Hall, the Bunker Hill monument or a pot of baked beans; Salem has two witches, and so on through all the cities of note. Then there are spoons with silver dollars and half-dollars for the bowl. Some have the heads of the different Presidents, royal personages, great artists, scientists and discoverers on the handles. Others have the figures of mythological characters at the tip of the hundle. The coats of arms of each of the United States and foreign countries are also used. In fact, the craze for spoons has gone so far that iewels and precious metals, mosafor no one can object to receiving flowers, In fact, the craze for spoons has gone so far that jewels and precious metals, mosaics, cameos and all kinds of enamels are used in them, and any subject desired can be wrought by the silversmith's skill into a part of the spoon. Among the collections are those surpassing any one's powers of description, for they have been brought from all points of the known globe; and the fad is known all over the world, for at any place visited the spoon characteristic of the place or country can be found, from Hammerfest to the Cape of Good Hope. The valentines this year are apt to be more substantial than paper, though in many instances they will not cost nearly as much as the creations which have been known in years past as valentines.

Another week has been filled with a return of those affairs called receptions, teas, thimble, card, dancing and other parties that make life a round of pleasant social meetings. Monday Miss Duncan gave an elegant dancing party for young people, in Henry Gramling had a card party, and Mrs. Ida Scott a song recital.
